WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

EVAN MACY, SPORTS EDITOR

Is this the year? It could be. It really could. I know that's hard for Eagles fans to consider. We have all gone through Donovan McNabb throwing up in the locker room and Chip Kelly's broken promises, but the 2017 Eagles could be something special, and it's time to start enjoying it. We talked to a local sports psychologist who explains what makes it so hard for this fan base to think with optimism. Read about it on page 21 and at metro.us.

DETAILS ON N. KOREAN HACKING CAMPAIGN

1 The U.S. government issued a technical alert about cyberattacks it said are sponsored by the North Korean government that have targeted the aerospace, telecommunications and financial industries since 2016. The alert, from the FBI and Department of Homeland Security, said North Korean hackers were using a type of malware known as "FALLCHILL" to gain entry to computers and compromise network systems. The FBI and DHS had issued a warning in June that squarely blamed the North Korean government for a raft of cyberattacks stretching back to 2009 targeting media, aerospace and financial sectors, as well as critical infrastructure, in the United States and globally. The alert included the publication of IP addresses the FBI said were linked to the hacking campaign and was intended to help private industry guard against the attacks.

GUNMAN KILLS FOUR IN CALIFORNIA SHOOTING

2 A gunman carrying a semiautomatic weapon and two handguns opened fire at multiple locations across a small Northern California community on Tuesday, killing four people before he was slain by police. At least 10 other people were wounded, including two children at an elementary school near the small town of Corning, about 100 miles north of Sacramento, where the suspect was killed, according to police and local media. "Deeply saddened to hear of the shooting in Northern California, the loss of life, including innocent children," Vice President Mike Pence said on Twitter. "We commend the effort of courageous law enforcement. We'll continue to monitor the situation & provide federal support, as we pray for comfort & healing for all impacted."

IN SESSION

3 U.S. Attorney General Jeff Sessions acknowledged on Tuesday he was aware of contact between Donald Trump's election campaign and Russian intermediaries, again modifying a previous statement about the extent of connections to Moscow.

US AGENCIES DETECTED KASPERSKY SOFTWARE

4 About 15 percent of U.S. federal agencies have reported some trace of Moscow-based Kaspersky Lab software on their systems, a Department of Homeland Security (DHS) official told Congress on Tuesday. Jeanette Manfra, assistant secretary for cybersecurity at DHS, told a U.S. House of Representatives panel that 94 percent of agencies had responded to a directive ordering them to survey their networks to identify any use of Kaspersky Lab products. The administration of President Donald Trump ordered civilian U.S. agencies in September to remove Kaspersky Lab from their networks, amid worries the antivirus firm was vulnerable to Kremlin influence and that using its anti-virus software could jeopardize national security.

SERIAL KILLER COULD BE BEHIND TAMPA SHOOTING

5 Police in Tampa, Florida, were investigating whether a fatal shooting on Tuesday could be linked to a possible serial killer who is feared to have murdered three victims in a string of night attacks terrorizing a city neighborhood. The 60-year-old victim, Ronald Felton, was shot from behind shortly before 5 a.m. as he was crossing a street in central Tampa's Seminole Heights area, interim Tampa Police Chief Brian Dugan told reporters. "Right now we are treating it as though it is related [to the previous killings] until we can rule otherwise," Dugan said. Three people were shot to death in Seminole Heights last month, two of them while waiting at bus stops. Dugan described the gunman as a black male with a thin build, dressed in black and wearing a black baseball cap, and said he likely lived in the area.

Sex harassment lawsuit against Philly sheriff is not first accusation

Multiple women have accused Philly Sheriff Jewell Williams of sexual misconduct in the workplace.

SAM NEWHOUSE
@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Philadelphia Sheriff Jewell Williams is facing allegations from multiple women who claim he sexually harassed them at the office.

The accusations follow the filing last week of a federal lawsuit by former employee Vanessa Bines, who claimed Williams and Deputy Sheriff Paris Washington, sexually harassed her.

Williams, 60, has denied all the allegations.

Bines said she was harassed from 2013 to 2015, and accused Williams of calling her a "home-wrecker" and "whore" after spurning his advances while she worked as a secretary at the sheriff's office and entered into a relationship with his driver.

Bines' lawsuit indicated she was already approved to sue after reporting the alleged harassment to an Equal Employment Opportunity commission. She said her relationship with Williams' driver led him to monitor her conduct at work closely, contact her landlord to get her evicted and retaliate professionally by preventing her from getting other jobs. Other conduct allegedly included sexual jokes and unwanted inquiries about her genitalia, she alleges.

Now the Inquirer has revealed two other women previously made similar allegations against Williams.

Former sheriff's office employee Marlaina Williams filed a complaint that Williams sexually harassed her from 2013 until June of this year when she quit the job after a panic attack she claims was related to the harassment.

She said that when she began dating another male employee at the office, Williams' jealousy was sparked, the complaint claims, and he began making comments like, "I'm jealous that he gets to go home with you and not me" and "I'm gonna transfer your boyfriend and put him on the overnight shift so y'all can't spend any time together," the Inquirer reported.

Another woman, Karan M. Rogers, who worked as an aide with Williams when he was a state representative for the 197th district in North Philly, in 2011 settled a lawsuit over alleged conduct by Williams that drove her to quit as well.

Rogers said Williams mocked her for being Christian, smelled her hair and asked other coworkers to do the same, and frequently cornered and tried to kiss her.

Rogers is not commenting on her suit.

Williams is currently on his second term as sheriff, having been elected in 2011 and re-elected in 2015.

PHILLY COP CHARGED

Philadelphia police officer charged in drug-running scandal

A Philadelphia police officer formerly with the Baltimore city police department was charged Tuesday with corruption for allegedly participating in a gun and narcotics sales scheme.

Troy Snell, 33, was arrested Tuesday by federal prosecutors and charged with possessing cocaine and heroin with intent to sell.

A Baltimore cop until 2008 before going on to join the Philly police force in 2014, Snell allegedly helped accomplices who included Baltimore police sell cocaine and heroin seized by Baltimore Police Department's Gun Trace Task Force.

Snell allegedly used his brother to sell more than nine ounces of cocaine seized from a suspect arrested after an Oct. 3, 2016, pursuit, and also helped set up the sale of 80 grams of heroin, federal prosecutors say. Thousands of dollars of profit were allegedly earned from the sales.

Snell's next hearing is scheduled for Nov. 17. He could face up to 20 years in prison. SAM NEWHOUSE

#StillIn: How Philly is staying green under Donald Trump

Philadelphia officials and activists are on the same page when it comes to holding onto the Paris Accords.

@scnewhouse
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Fighting climate change isn't easy in a country where your president doesn't even believe that it's real.

But in Philadelphia, like-minded and environmentally-conscious officials and activists are working together to ensure that the carbon emissions reductions called for under the Paris Accords agreement take effect here, regardless of Trump's stance.

"Philadelphians refuse to leave the Paris Accords," said Mikhel Harrison, a member of Organizing for Action. "Clean energy is critical to Philadelphia and our surrounding counties. Not only does it keep our air and water clean and our citizens healthy, but it keeps American innovation and jobs right here in the city. Leaving the agreement is not what our city or our country needs."

Harrison was at a "#StillIn rally in Center City on Tuesday, one of hundreds held across the country to call for an increased domestic focus on environmental reforms despite the Trump administration's steps in the opposite direction.

Also on Tuesday, Mayor Jim Kenney's office released "Powering Our Future: A Clean Energy Vision for Philadelphia," a report on how it plans to meet the sorts of goals the that the Paris Accords were intended to achieve.

"This work has become all the more critical in the wake of the Trump Administration's decision to withdraw from the Paris Climate Agreement and proposal to rescind the Clean Power Plan," Kenney wrote in a letter. "To lead by example, my administration has already issued a Municipal Energy Master Plan that outlines how the city will better manage our own assets [including buildings and street lighting] while reducing energy use and greenhouse gas emissions."

Concerns from climate change are very real for the City of Brotherly Love, according to the report, and include concerns about the city beginning to see as many as 52 days a year above 95 degrees by the year 2100, heavier rains and snowfall, and worse flooding along the Schuylkill and Delaware rivers.

The Schuylkill River flows by downtown Philadelphia. CHARLES MOSTOLLER

Mayor Kenney has pledged to continue fulfilling the goals of the Paris Accords despite Trump's controversial decision to withdraw from it. He has set a goal of reducing Philly carbon emissions by 80 percent below 2006 levels by 2050.

Early steps include a coming "major energy retrofit" on the Philadelphia Museum of Art, the single-largest energy user among city buildings; seeking proposals for a long-term commitment to purchase renewable energy from a large-scale wind, solar or other renewable energy company; encouraging citizens to keep installing solar panels on their roofs, and transitioning municipal systems that rely on gas or oil heat to "emerging technologies like microgrids, high-efficiency heat pumps, fuel cells, geothermal and solar heating systems, and renewable biogas," the city's report said.

Also on Wednesday, the city will launch Philacycle, an expansion of Philadelphia's Recycling Rewards program offered through Recyclebank.

"Powering Our Future outlines opportunities for residents, communities, and institutions to make Philadelphia's clean energy vision a reality," said Christine Knapp, the city's director of sustainability. "This draft report is the next step in an important on-going conversation about how we can work together to make sure all Philadelphians can efficiently use clean, affordable energy."

Donald Trump Jr. releases Twitter conversations with WikiLeaks

Trump's eldest son posted the correspondences on social media.

LENYON WHITAKER
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

President Trump's eldest son, Donald Trump Jr. released correspondences he had with WikiLeaks before the 2016 election and posted the conversation on Twitter.

"Here is the entire chain of messages with @wikileaks (with my whopping 3 responses) which one of the congressional committees has chosen to selectively leak," he wrote on Twitter.

The Atlantic reported Donald Trump Jr. was contacted by the WikiLeaks Twitter account via direct message on September 20, 2016, just before midnight.

"A PAC run anti-Trump site putintrump.org is about to launch," WikiLeaks wrote in the message. "The PAC is a recycled pro-Iraq War PAC. We have guessed the password. It is 'putintrump.' See 'About' for who is behind it. Any comments?"

The message to Trump Jr. came just three weeks before Donald Trump's running mate Mike Pence denied any communication the campaign had with WikiLeaks.

About 12 hours later, Trump Jr. responds, "Off the record don't know who that is but I'll ask around. Thanks."

These direct messages as well as others were sent by Trump Jr.'s lawyers to congressional investigators and were also obtained by The Atlantic.

The messages appear to be a one-sided conversation between the WikiLeaks Twitter account and Donald Trump Jr. It appears that he only responded to WikiLeaks twice, once on Sept. 3 and again on Oct. 3.

In October 2016, WikiLeaks asked Trump Jr. to "comment on/push this story" about Democratic presidential nominee at the time Hillary Clinton wanting to "just drone" WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange.

"Already did that earlier today," Trump Jr. responded. "It's amazing what she can get away with."

Trump Jr. followed by asking WikiLeaks about a "Wednesday leak" he had heard about.

"What's behind this Wednesday leak I keep reading about?" Trump inquired.

According to the series of direct messages, WikiLeaks never responded to Trump Jr.'s inquiry about the "Wednesday leak," but the account continued to message Trump Jr. asking him to ask his father to share and promote articles created by WikiLeaks. Although Trump Jr. didn't respond via direct message it appears he may have relayed the messages to his father.

"What's behind this Wednesday leak I keep reading about?"

Thanks to this new MIT device, you will never kill plants again

The technology can predict droughts and let farmers and gardeners know when their plants are dying, long before they wilt.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Some people have a green thumb, and others forget to water their houseplants and garden plots until all the leaves are wilting and it's too late to save them.

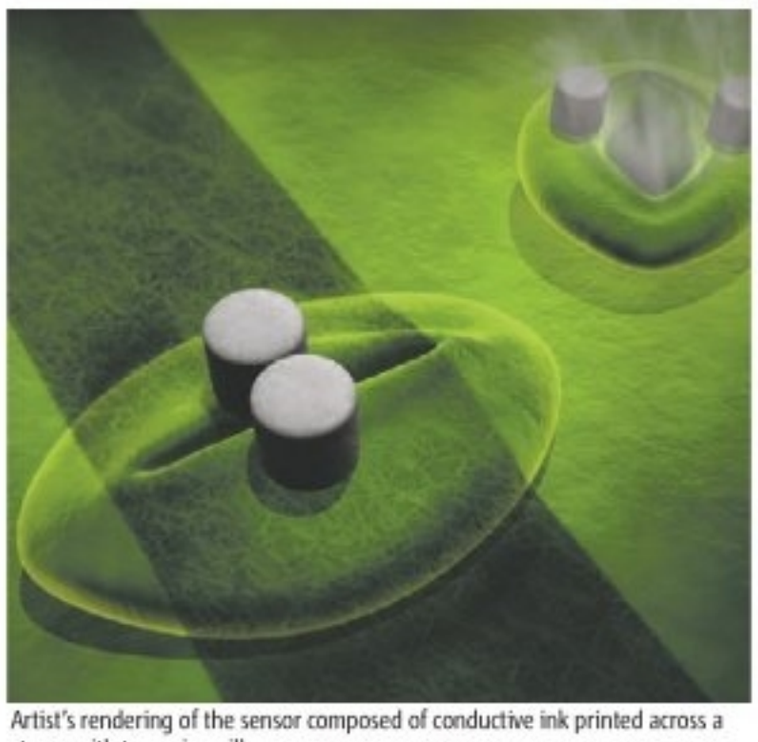
But what if your plant could tell you when it needs water? That may be the future, thanks to engineers at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

MIT engineers have developed a sensor that can be "printed" onto a plant's leaf and transmit data from the plant itself about if it's experiencing water stress.

That sensor contains electronic circuit nanotechnology and is about five times thinner than a human hair, said Michael Strano, an MIT chemical engineering professor and the senior author of the new study on the development. The sensor sits on top of the plant's "stomata," the small pores found on leaves.

"If you look on the surface of a leaf, you'll see millions of little pores that actually look like eyes, and they actually open and close in real time," he said.

These pores help hydrate the plant by opening to evaporate water. "You can think of it as the plant is drinking," Strano said. "It evaporates water through the pore and that evaporation pulls water up from the soil."



Artist's rendering of the sensor composed of conductive ink printed across a stoma with two micropillars. COURTESY OF BETSY SKRIP

Plants start to die from lack of water days before they visibly wilt, if they even wilt at all, Strano said — and these pores show the earliest signs of drought. To develop this technology, Strano and his coauthor Volodymyr Koman stopped watering a peace lily plant and noticed a change in how those pores function.

"What ended up happening, way before the plant starts to wilt we see that the pores will open slower," he said. "Because the plant uses water potential to open and close this pore, [when there's no water], the plant is almost drowsy, like a sleepy child whose eyes are opening and closing slowly."

That drowsiness, or latency, helps predict if the plant is in a water shortage before it starts dying. Strano is working on developing a small sticker that contains the sensors, so the amateur gardener can put it on their plants and monitor them via their phone.

Aside from that one gardener, this has huge implications for our food system, Strano said. First, it can help predict droughts so farmers better able to rescue their crops.

Second — and to Strano, more importantly — these sensors can help scientists specifically identify plants that are good at handling lower amounts of water.

"The hope is that by doing this we could crossbreed plants that can flourish and provide food under conditions where the water is not as available, creating crops that are more resistant to drought," he said. "The definition of what a drought is can start to change, and if the weather changes, if the climate changes, the food yield won't drop as much, and it can be a piece of the puzzle for food security for the world."

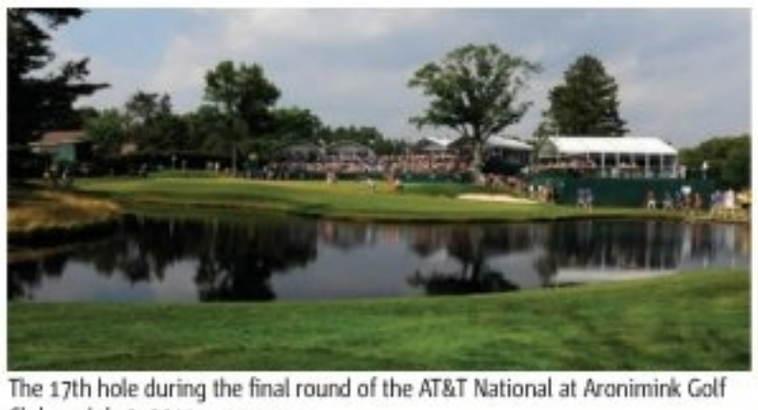
Philadelphia lands PGA men's, women's major championships

What will the Philadelphia sports landscape look like in 10 years?

Will the Eagles finally have a Super Bowl title? Will the Sixers' Process be complete?

After an annoucement made Tuesday we know one thing for sure about this city's sports scene in 2027 — it will host a major golf championship.



The 17th hole during the final round of the AT&T National at Aronimink Golf Club on July 3, 2011. GETTY IMAGES

Historic Aronimink Golf Club will host it's second ever PGA Championship in ten years. This in addition to being slated to host the BMW Championship — part of the FedEx playoffs, next September.

The KPMG Women's PGA Championship will be here in 2020, a much more relatable timeframe and one locals can get excited about.

"The membership of Aronimink welcomes the PGA of America back to the site of Gary Player's 1962 PGA Championship," said the club's president Joe Fabrizio. "We are very excited to be the host venue for these two great championship events. Our golf course, recently restored to Donald Ross' original design, will be a true test of golf for both the women and men."

The 2020 event will put women's golf in the headlines in Philadelphia, in addition to the LPGA ShopRite Classic held not far from the city near Atlantic City, N.J. every year.

"Through the KPMG Women's PGA Championship, we continue to elevate women on and off the golf course," KPMB US Chairman and CEO Lynn Doughtie said. "Aronimink Golf Club will provide another top caliber course on which the world's best women golfers can compete. To help more women in business advance to the C-suite, the KPMG Women's Leadership Summit provides next-generation women leaders with high-impact leadership development content, networking, and access to inspirational leaders." Report: Roy Moore banned from mall in '80s for trying to pick up teenage girls

People who used to go to the mall said Moore would hang out there.

Roy Moore, the Republican nominee for U.S. Senate in Alabama, was reportedly banned from a mall in the 1980s because he became known for trying to pick up young girls.

The Gadsden Mall in Gadsden, Alabama, was a popular place for young people to hang out in the 1980s, but new reports allege the Republican Senate nominee used to frequent the social meeting spot and make advances on young women.

According to The New Yorker, several former mall employees, at least two police officers and local people who used to hang out at the Gadsden Mall in the 1980s all say they either remember or have heard of Moore being banned from the mall because he became known for making advances on teenage girls.

A former mall employee told The New Yorker that a police officer who worked at the mall as a security guard asked him to be on the lookout for Moore, saying he was "banned from the mall."

Another police officer said it was "common knowledge" that Moore had a reputation for "cruising the mall for high school dates."

AL.com reported that five Etowah County residents had similar stories.

"Him liking and dating young girls was never a secret in Gadsden," said Sheryl Porter to AL.com. "Even people at the courthouse know. It was a well-known secret."

Nearly all of Trump's judicial nominees are white men, most in decades

Ninety-one percent of President Donald Trump's nominees for federal judgeships are white and 81 percent are male, the highest percentage of white men in 30 years, a survey by the Associated Press has found.

"Nobody wants to talk about it," he says. "But when you think of it ... that has consequences 40 years out." At a recent Cabinet meeting, he predicted, "a big percentage of the court will be changed by this administration over a very short period of time."

Out of 58 nominees to lifetime positions on appellate and district courts, and the Supreme Court, 53 are white, three are Asian-American, one is Hispanic and one is African-American, the AP found. Forty-seven are men; 11 are women. Thirteen have been confirmed by the Senate.

President Barack Obama made diversifying the court a priority during his two terms in office. Only 37 percent of his confirmed nominees were white men. Nearly 42 percent of his approved judges were women.

If Trump's nomination trends continue, he'll be the first president since Herbert Hoover to name fewer women and minorities to the bench than his Republican predecessor, the AP says.

Trump has an unusual opportunity to reshape the judicial landscape. The Republican-controlled Senate blocked all of Obama's judicial nominees in the last year of his term, creating more than 100 open positions for Trump to fill. And Trump has moved with unusual speed: He has appointed twice as many judges as Obama had at this point in his first term.

Kyle Barry, senior policy counsel for the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, said that without diversity among judges, "there's a clear perception where the courts are not a place people can go and vindicate their civil rights."

White House spokesman Hogan Gidley says Trump is focused on qualifications. "The president has delivered on his promise to nominate the best, most-qualified judges," said Gidley. "While past presidents may have chosen to nominate activist judges with a political agenda and a history of legislating from the bench, President Trump has nominated outstanding originalist judges who respect the U.S. Constitution." These pet parenting techniques will simplify and improve your life

Make more time for snuggles and chasing squirrels.

KIMBERLY M. AQUILINA
@KimESTAqui
kimberly.aquilina@metro.us

My cats are my kids. Wait, wait! Hear me out. I love my furry little jerks, but sometimes taking care of them is a hassle (that I'll gladly take) when life gets busy. And those are cats! Dogs typically require more attention than their feline counterparts, so we're offering up these five hacks to make pet parenthood easier.

Doggy breath is not the same delight as puppy breath

While you're cooking, break off a sprig of parsley for stinky-mouthed Spot. Petnet, a provider of personalized pet care, suggests sprinkling your pet's food with the antimicrobial herb. Parsley also has been credited with strengthening immunity.

And parsley is a barely-any-calorie food for your doggo to enjoy. For more treats your pet will enjoy without packing on pounds, check out Animal Planet host Travis Brorsen's low-cal list.

Share your jar of coconut oil

According to Petnet, putting coconut oil on your dog's fur, especially if your pup is prone to dry skin, is a great idea and can be used to soothe skin and heal rashes.

However, I'm slightly skeptical since I doubt the oil would stay on your pet's skin long enough to have any benefits before he laps it up. Before a Saturday night out, I use coconut oil on my legs and have to dash out the door before being harassed by my aforementioned kitties. (I'm making them sound like real jerks. Sorry, Itchy and Chula!)

Use rubber gloves for cleaning

If you have a pet, chances are — no matter how hard you try — your life is covered in fur. Pet hair is a condiment in your house, but your guests might prefer some spicy mustard, so clean up dog hair with a rubber glove, Petnet says.

Just wet the glove and run it over your couch, blankets, clothes or carpet for easy hair removal.

Make time for playtime

Life gets busy. Sometimes "busy" is life's natural state of being. But look at your dog's face (go ahead, we'll wait). That's a face that says, "Play with me!"

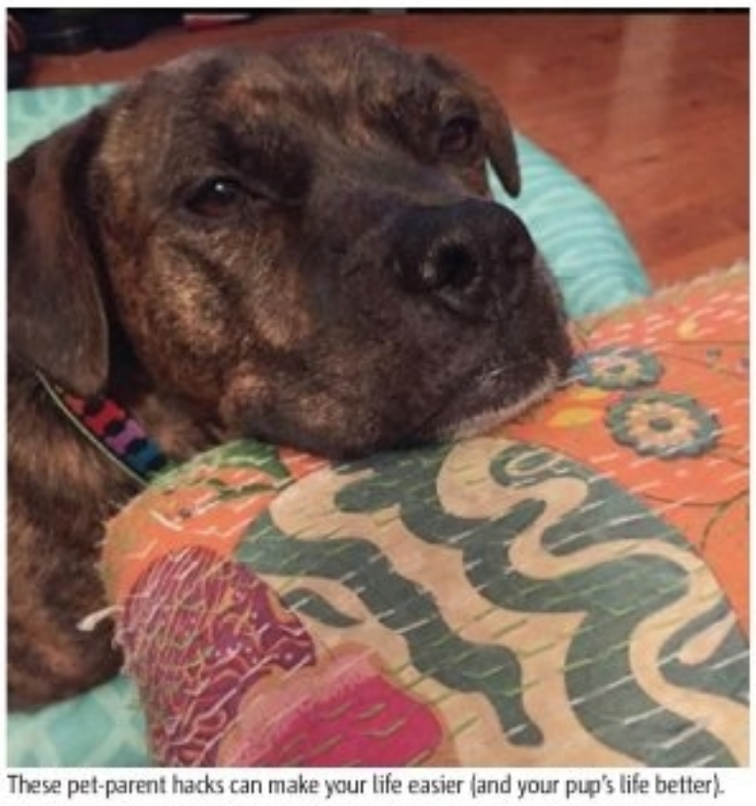
If you need to study, blog, look up Thanksgiving recipes or binge-watch Netflix (OK, maybe not a need, but a very it-could-happen possibility), tether a rope toy around your foot. Your dog can pull and pull while your hands are free to turn pages, knit or pop some bonbons a là Peggy Bundy.

Be a sneaky but responsible pet parent by squeezing some enzymatic doggy toothpaste on the rope first. It's never been easier to "brush" your dog's teeth!

Slow down, buddy!

My cats are like their mom (that's me): They eat too quickly. If your dog devours her food in seconds, put a ball in her bowl or something else that she'd have to eat around.

No upset tummy or puke stains on your carpet! Mazel.



These pet-parent hacks can make your life easier (and your pup's life better).

The FDA just approved use of a 'trackable' pill

The FDA says the tracking feature of a newly approved pill (not pictured) will be useful for certain types of patients, including adults with depression, bipolar disorders and schizophrenia. GETTY IMAGES

Is Big Brother coming to medicine?

MEAGAN MORRIS
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Do you constantly forget when — and if — you took your medication? A type of pill approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration might be right up your alley.

The FDA will allow the makers of Abilify MyCite aripiprazole, a medication prescribed to treat schizophrenia and manic episodes, to sell the tablets outfitted with an ingestible sensor that "activates when it reaches stomach fluids and communicates with the patch," according to the FDA. This allows doctors, patients and their families insight on when (and if) the medication was taken.

The medication is not tracked in real time. It takes anywhere from 30 minutes to two hours for the sensor to relay information back to a wearable patch, according to the FDA. The information is then accessible via a smartphone app. However, there isn't a 100 percent guarantee that the medicine will always track correctly.

The FDA says the pill's tracking feature will be useful for certain types of patients, including adults with depression, bipolar disorders and schizophrenia, a devastating mental illness that affects up to 1 percent of adults in the United States.

"The FDA supports the development and use of new technology in prescription drugs and is committed to working with companies to understand how this technology might benefit patients and prescribers," the FDA's Mitchell Mathis said in a statement.

The trackable medication isn't yet shown to improve patient compliance, according to the FDA, but taking it can give the patient and caregivers important information "with the goal of allowing physicians to be more informed in making treatment decisions that are specific to the patient's needs."

The sensor likely won't change the size of the tablets, either: It's about the size of a grain of sand.

"The goal [is] allowing physicians to be more informed in making treatment decisions that are specific to the patient's needs."

The FDA, on the new pill

US safety board criticizes Amtrak 'weak safety culture'

The head of the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board criticized Amtrak's safety record at a hearing on Tuesday on a fatal 2016 crash and said the railroad failed to use critical safety equipment that could have prevented the incident.

An Amtrak train traveling from New York in April 2016 struck a backhoe on the railroad tracks in Chester, Pennsylvania, killing two maintenance workers and injuring 41.

NTSB Chairman Robert Sumwalt told a hearing the board's "investigation revealed more than two dozen unsafe conditions and not all of these were rule-breaking by frontline employees."

Sumwalt said that "clumsy Amtrak procedures seem to encourage workarounds by workers to get the job done," and added investigators "found a culture of fear" at Amtrak.

The NTSB found Amtrak managers allowed "multiple unsafe conditions to persist." The report also found three employees involved in the accident tested positive for potentially impairing drugs, and one employee said that Amtrak emphasized on-time performance over safety. REUTERS

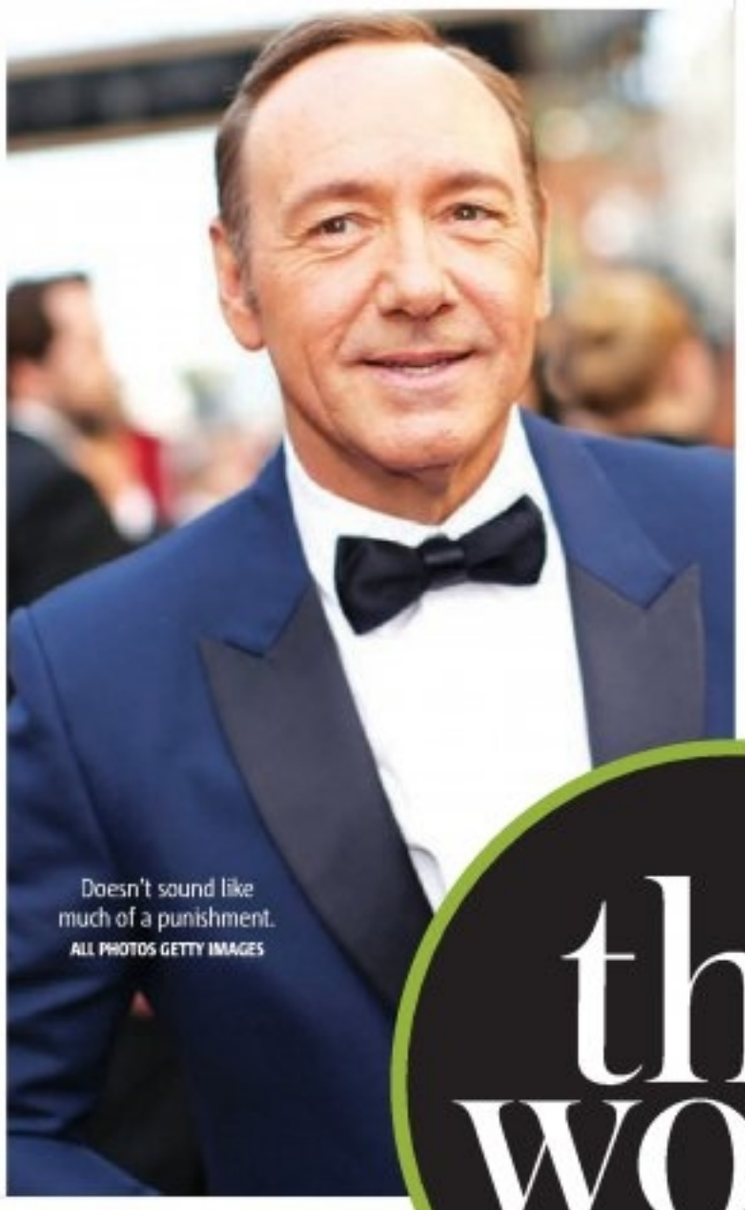
Kevin Spacey is having a great time in rehab

Remember when Kevin Spacey responded to allegations of sexual assault by trying to distract the masses with a coming-out statement? Well, the 58-year-old actor has taken to the Meadows — a rehab clinic that's the go-to for troubled stars who want to act as if they're changing their image. No, seriously — Harvey Weinstein is reportedly seeking treatment there. As if you could treat symptoms of harmful patriarchal structures for $28,000 a month!

They're not the only ones, either. Celebrities — from Selena Gomez to Kate Moss — have long sought treatment at the clinic, which treats sex addiction, drug addiction, eating disorders, alcoholism and more with New Age-influenced therapy, yoga, riding lessons and a plethora of stuffed animals to cry into.

Sounds like a great time, honestly.



Doesn't sound like much of a punishment.

Jordin Sparks secretly wed, got pregnant

Jordin Sparks is just another brave woman willing to procreate during the precarious Trump administration. That's right: The "American Idol" alum is expecting and she also got married while you weren't looking. Sneaky! The 27-year-old secretly wed 25-year-old aspiring model Dana Isaiah in July, surrounded by the sights of Hawaii and a small group of close friends.

Sparks met Isaiah's family in February. After their respective mothers set them up over text, the now-couple met face to face in April. "A couple days after we had actually met, I was like in my head 'That's going to be my husband! That's my husband right there.'" Sounds too soon, but what do we know about love!? That's right, nothing.

Congratulations to this beautiful couple that barely knows each other. And good luck, also.

the word

Meghan & Harry still aren't engaged, BTW

This has been your weekly update.

First things first: No, Meghan Markle and Prince Harry — the hot ginger royal we all know and love, in that faraway way you have affection for people you don't actually know — are still not engaged. But maybe they will be soon — especially when you consider that Markle is maybe leaving "Suits."

Deadline reports that Markle and co-lead Patrick J. Adams are both eyeing exits from the series after seven seasons. Markle, for one, is honestly too busy to continue being an actress, because dating a royal takes a lot of time out of one's schedule. You understand.

Many people are taking Markle's potential exit as a sign that she and Harry are really actually getting engaged this time. But let's think about that for a second. Why would they get engaged when there could just be rumors of them getting engaged for the rest of time, you know?

Keegan-Michael Key is off the market, again

Keegan-Michael Key is engaged to be married. And the "Friends From College" and "Key & Peele" star is so serious about this affair that he got a representative to talk to Us Weekly about it. Like, chill, brah.

The magazine confirms that Key proposed to his girlfriend, producer-director Elisa Pugliese, and she said yes. The 46-year-old and his newish lady have attended red carpets together, but mostly have stayed mum about their relationship.

This will be his second go in the merry-go-round that I like to call wedded bliss followed by, "Oh wait, what have I done?" Key was married to Hollywood dialect coach Cynthia Blaise for 17 years. They separated in November 2015 and filed divorce papers in December of that year. Neat-o!

So yes, let's heap on more congratulations for yet another couple we don't know. As they kids say, mazel!

Neat!

Rob Reiner declares the rom-com dead

They just aren't serving "what she's having" anymore.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroNewYork
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

Meg Ryan and Billy Crystal in the 1989 classic.
COLUMBIA PICTURES

When the director behind some of the most beloved romantic comedies (including "When Harry Met Sally" and "The Princess Bride") declares the end of the genre, I can't help but reflexively reach for the tissues to mourn the loss. But Hollywood has evolved since Reiner and Co. founded Castle Rock Entertainment 30 years ago, and as he sees it, "they just don't make those movies anymore."

"I started Castle Rock with four partners in 1987, and we've made over 130 movies," he says. "Not one of them would ever get made at a studio. And I'm talking 'City Slickers,' 'A Few Good Men' … any of them."

What's behind the shift from these classics to today's box office catnip? Blame it on the franchise funnel.

"Studios are only making movies with the word 'man' and a number in the title," continues Reiner. "Like 'Batman 7,' 'Iron Man 4,' 'Spider-Man 2,' 'Superman 11' — if there's a 'man' and a number, and at least now what with 'Wonder Woman' a 'woman' and a number, they'll make it."

"When Harry Met Sally" starred two relatively unknown leads. Meg Ryan was no star, and Billy Crystal was known mostly on the comedy circuit.

"If you tried to make a romantic comedy that was somewhat representational of what men and women are like with each other today, well 'good luck!'" he says. "Unless you can get two really big stars that foreign markets can buy, it's very hard to get those films made."

Another pitfall of the cinema scene today is the dearth of clever copy. All the big money makers seem to use scripts ripped from the pages of comic books rather than constructed by gifted writers.

"You need people that're witty and brilliant, and have great observational powers about men and women, and how they relate to each other," Reiner reminisced, calling out the genius of Nora Ephron. "Studios just aren't interested in these movies."

It's not all doom and gloom for the industry (and for us fans of classic rom-coms). Reiner sees great things being made on independent screens with independent purse strings. "If you look at the Oscars," he says, "none of them are financed by studios. A perfect example is 'Wolf Of Wall Street,' which had Martin Scorsese and Leonardo DiCaprio, the biggest director and star in the world. And they couldn't get it financed. No one would put up the money. Finally, after six years, they got the money themselves, and then Paramount distributed it."

GETTY

Good to hear. Because I like romantic comedies the way I like my pie.

"Heated, but I don't want the ice cream on top, I want it on the side, and I'd like strawberry instead of vanilla if you have it; if not then no ice cream, just whipped cream — but only if it's real. If it's out of the can, then nothing," in the words of Sally Albright back in 1989.

"Not even the pie?" asked her waitress.

"No, I want the pie. But then not heated."

Dr. Andrew Weil's family of restaurants is all about combining nutrition and deliciousness. Have a few vegan family members? Why not stop by the King of Prussia location to pick up a squash pie. It may be even more delicious than the standard pumpkin with its wintry mix of cinnamon, ginger and cloves. Top it off with whipped coconut cream and you'll satisfy your sweet tooth in a more wholesome way.

Stay local with your Etsy splurges

Here are six Philly-based Etsy shops that specialize in great homeware and decor.

MADELINE PRESLAND
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

If you want to up your home decor game, finding those cute and quirky items in stores isn't an easy task. Plus, it's even better when you don't need to leave your house (or bed) to find something new. Etsy gives shoppers the chance to purchase unique and often handmade goods you won't find at a larger homeware store. Here are six Philly-based Etsy shops for you to go treat yourself. (And your house!)

Oh, honey

Craftsmanship and a fair amount of puns join forces for SugarOHoneyHoney. The shop that specializes in hand stamped vintage silverware is perfect for a housewarming gift, wedding present or accessory, or just to buy for yourself. Little sayings range from sweet to funny. Either way, these little messages are sure to make you or a gift recipient smile. $10.99 to $59.99, etsy.com/shop/SugarOHoneyHoney

Writing a love note

Learn a little more about the city by putting it on your wall. Philly Love Notes creates custom wood maps of the city. Get a map of South Philly, or go bigger. Owner Emma Fried-Cassorla can customize the maps with little hearts or initials to help tell your own Philly story. $50 to $350, etsy.com/shop/PhillyLoveNotes

Ceramic serendipity

If you want to have a couple of special plates or other servingware, look no further than CarvedByLisa's beautiful ceramic pieces. Shapes range from planters to plates, and even wall decor. Look for fun textures and subtly beautiful glaze finishes. $10 to $45, etsy.com/shop/carvedbylisa

How cute is this spoon?

Decorating with decals

Decals can be much more than a fun laptop accessory or something from your car window. DecalPhanatics make elaborate designs to stick on items or walls. They also put a twist on their own product with decorated shadow boxes. $1.99 to $24.99, etsy.com/shop/DecalPhanatics

Franklin fanatic

Benjamin Franklin's likeness is all over the city. He's even on a coaster, complete with a snapback. Find Philly-tastic drink coasters, bottle openers, pillows and greeting cards through Frankadelphia's shop. (They have some Pittsburgh designs too!) $2 to $40, $1.99 to $24.99, etsy.com/shop/Frankadelphia

Be a muggle

If you have room in your cabinet for more cool mugs, VictoryScreechLabs should be your next stop on your Etsy adventures. Owner Chris Moore's variety of funky figures and designs will definitely up your houseware game the next time you have someone over for coffee. $15 to $20, etsy.com/shop/VictoryScreechLabs

Why Eagles fans are scared to think 'Super Bowl'

"There are recent examples, the 2008 Phillies, the 2016 Cubs, the 2017 Astros. They said, 'Why not us?'" Philadelphia-area sports psychologist Joel Fish said. GETTY IMAGES

How are Eagles fans handling their favorite team's recent success? We asked a sports psychologist.

EVAN MACY
@evan_macy
evan.macy@metro.us

It's been passed on from generation to generation of Philadelphia sports fans: don't get your hopes up.

From the Phillies collapse of 1964, to the lean times of the 1970s, to the early 2000s Eagles' failures to win a Super Bowl all the way to the beginning of the Sixers' painful rebuilding process — fans of Philadelphia teams know not to expect too much.

According to renowned sports psychologist Joel Fish, director of The Center of Sports Psychology in Philadelphia, that's not healthy.

"You have grandparents who have taught their kids and grandkids," Fish, who has worked with players on all four major teams in the city for the past 25 years, told Metro. "There is a unique four generation history when it comes to the Eagles, where one generation passes beliefs on to the next. It gets passed down that we have to be cautious in our expectations. If your younger you're more likely top be optimistic. Having said that, being raised in this town is learning this history."

The 8-1 Eagles, according to Las Vegas, have a 1-in-5 chance of winning the Super Bowl. They have the best record in football and have all but assured a berth to the playoffs. Any other fan base would be pumping the optimism through every facet of their lives — watching the best team in the NFL win week after week. But not Philadelphia.

This city has never hoisted the Lombardi Trophy, and anyone remembering a football championship parade (the most recent was 1960) is collecting social security checks.

"If you look at the progression of fan behavior it's uniquely Philadelphian based on our history of having been let down before," Fish said.

But with seven consecutive wins in the Eagles column, things are becoming too good to deny. And many are finally allowing themselves to enjoy the potential success.

"We reached a new juncture after this last Denver victory and you've got more and more fans allowing themselves to get out of their comfort zone," Fish said. "There is a new phenomenon — you have fans now daring to think too far ahead and some see this team as a team of destiny. Look at what has happened with [suspended Cowboys RB] Ezekiel Elliott and [Injured Packers QB] Aaron Rodgers. For the first time with the bye week a higher percentage of fans are allowing themselves to use the word Super Bowl."

It isn't hard to understand the reason for cautiousness from a fan perspective. The more someone gets their hopes up the more they can be dashed. But from a psychological perspective, a city winning a major sports championship has an incredibly beneficial social and mental impact.

"The Eagles present an opportunity here for us to learn as a fan base to embrace specialness," Fish said. "How to enjoy the moment, how to dream, how to unite and just help each other to appreciate what we have. I think we have this history, but let's embrace opportunity. To develop a new part of out own collective personality. The beauty of sport and the beauty of being a fan is to be able to ride the wave when you have the opportunity to do it. We are pretty seasoned as fans to react when things aren't going our way."

> "We went over 100 seasons without a championship. No one else can say that. When you allow your expectations to rise, you can be disappointed when those expectations aren't met." Joel Fish

Drought conditions

Philly sports teams have won just one championship in the last 36 years ...

Phillies: 2008, 1980
76ers: 1955, 1967, 1983
Flyers: 1974, 1975
Eagles: 1948, 1949, 1960

NFL power rankings | by Luke Miller

No. 1

Eagles
8-1 (bye)

The league got a taste of adding Jay Ajayi to what was already a top five rushing attack when he sprinted for a 46-yard touchdown on the handful of carries he was given against Denver. Now the Eagles have had their bye week to fully integrate Ajayi into the offense.

No. 2

Saints
7-2 (W vs. BUF)

After they began the season unable to score in the red zone, the Saints had four touchdown runs of three yards or less Sunday. On defense they held the Bills to 198 yards, a large chunk of them coming in garbage time. They did all this in Buffalo, New York, to win their seventh straight game.

No. 3

Patriots
7-2 (W vs. DEN)

It was a night of records for New England. Tom Brady passed Peyton Manning with his 86th career road victory. The Patriots tied their own AFC record of 12 straight road wins. And Bill Belichick moved into a tie with Tom Landry for the third most coaching victories in league history.

No. 4

Rams
7-2 (W vs. HOU)

A week after Robert Woods had 70 yards and two scores against the Giants, he upped the stakes with 171 yards and another pair of scores against Houston. Offensive threats are coming out of the woodwork for Jared Goff, who had a career best 355 yards passing against Houston.

No. 5

Vikings
7-2 (W vs. CHI)

With Mike Zimmer refusing to say who will start at quarterback going forward, the Case Keenum vs Teddy Bridgewater argument hangs in limbo. Keenum is the Vikings third string QB. Bridgewater was their first round pick and the future of the franchise. But they're 7-2 with Keenum.

No. 6

Panthers
7-3 (W vs. MIA)

The Panthers racked up 548 yards - a franchise record - Monday night, a clear sign to the league that they're more than just a defense with Cam Newton. Though, their star quarterback did contribute 254 yards passing, 95 rushing, and four touchdowns to the record night.

No. 7

Steelers
7-2 (W vs. IND)

Ben Roethlisberger had under 250 yards passing, Le'veon Bell had 80 yards on 3.1 yards per carry, and Antonio Brown had 47 yards receiving. They pulled together for a game winning drive, but the Steelers remain the high ranked team most likely to throw out a dud because of performances like these.

No. 8

Jaguars
6-3 (W vs. LAC)

The Jaguars have their first three game winning streak since 2013. To get it, they survived taunting calls on Marquise Lee and Aaron Colvin that jeopardized the game's ending. A fake punt gave them most of their rushing attack on a day where Leonard Fournette was held in check.

No. 9

Seahawks
6-3 (W vs. ARZ)

Richard Sherman became the latest victim in a season of stars suffering season-ending injuries when he ruptured his Achilles. Sherman's streak of consecutive games played comes to an end at 105 - an impressive legacy of playing through injuries that finally caught up to him Thursday.

No. 10

Chiefs
6-3 (bye)

The Chiefs have endured a rough time since their 5-0 start, but things could be looking up: they leave their bye with both Andy Reid's vaunted post bye week success and games against the Giants, Bills, and Jets to look forward to.

Best of the rest

11 — Falcons (5-3)
12 — Lions (5-3)
13 — Cowboys (5-4)
14 — Titans 6-3)
15 — Washington (4-5)
16 — Bills (5-4)
17 — Ravens 4-5)
18 — Raiders (4-5)
19 — Packers (5-6)
20 — Jets (4-6)
21 — Cardinals (4-5)
22 — Chargers (3-6)
23 — Buccaneers (3-6)
24 — Colts (3-7
25 — Dolphins 4-5)

Aries You need to find a way to get rid of some excess energy. If you let thing brew, anger will take charge. Concentrate on physical challenges that will help relieve stress.

Taurus Don't get all worked up over nothing. Plug away until you take care of your responsibilities and can sit back and relax with friends or family. Romance is highlighted.

Gemini Your playful approach to life and love will help you gain access to information that can help you meet new people. Discuss your plans with someone you love.

Cancer Refuse to let anyone take advantage of you or cause you to make an emotional blunder. Consider the changes you can make that will encourage greater happiness.

Leo Be ready to make a leap from one thing or place to another. Your ability to make things happen will surprise someone who doesn't expect you to make a move.

Virgo Bypass discussions that make you feel uncomfortable or that you are not ready to deal with. Look at what you can do, and stay in touch with people who support you.

Libra Concentrate on the relationships you have with others. Whether at work or home or when dealing with friends, a positive attitude and sincerity will help build strong ties.

Scorpio Take the lead when the chance occurs. Look at the big picture and make choices that will give you the edge and help you outmaneuver any competition you encounter.

Sagittarius Put your mind at ease by doing what's best for you. Changes you make at home or work will increase your confidence and boost your income.

Capricorn Stay focused on what you need to accomplish. Don't let petty differences stir up anxiety and cost you time and money. Walk away from touchy situations.

Aquarius You can make progress when it comes to home improvements, investments and trying to get others to pitch in and help. Don't let bad habits take control.

Pisces If you want something, be willing to put in the hard labor, time and effort to make it happen. Intelligence and fortitude will help you reach your goal. EUGENIA LAST
